

I am a resident of Indiana who participates in the state sponsored telephone solicitation control program. IT is my understanding that the federal sponsored program will be less restrictive on solicitors than the Indiana program. The Indiana program has been extremely effective in controlling unwanted solicitation, and I would consider it a step backward to replace it with a less restrictive federal regulation. Might I suggest another approach that would use the Indiana program as a model for other states to adopt? Thank you for the opportunity to comment.